TURNING WATER INTO A WINE COMPANION

Welcome to Taste Champagne!

Champagne in Australia is in a massive state of flux right now, setting new records every year! Exciting diversity is beginning to emerge in this market long characterised by volume and value.

In 2022 Australia imported a record 10.5 million bottles of champagne at a record ex-cellar value of €188.3 million, making us the only country in the world to post growth in this tricky economic environment. This represents 12-fold growth in volume and even greater growth in value in the past 21 years, reaffirming our position as the fourth largest champagne market per head of population!

While the market share of growers remained stable at just 2%, coopératives doubled from 1.9 to 3.8%, consequently dropping market share of négociant houses to 93%, the lowest level so far this millennium.

In 2022, Australia imported 33 more brands than 2021, representing a record 135 houses, 187 growers and 15 coopératives, reflective of the increasing diversity of champagne in our market.

Non-vintage imports dropped to 88.8%, the lowest since 2008, thanks to small rises in rosé, prestige and vintage and especially in low dosage, which set a new record of 2.7% of imports, almost doubling 2021 shipments.

These figures reflect a slow yet exciting trend toward increasing diversity of champagne consumption in Australia, indicative of the maturing of the market. Such growth is unprecedented globally, and particularly noteworthy at a time when champagne availability remains limited and pricing is at a record high.

Champagne's steady march toward sustainability has diminished yields by roughly 25% in recent years, while increasing vineyard labour by a similar proportion. The price of grapes continues to spiral by around eight percent every year, from €6.20 in 2018 to close to €10 per kilogram in 2023. Ancillary and energy costs have also skyrocketed since the pandemic and the Ukraine war. Costs were further magnified by dismal yields in 2020 and 2021.

It takes between 1.2 and 1.5 kilograms of grapes to make a bottle of champagne. Historically, a kilogram of grapes was 35 percent of the average price of a bottle of champagne. Do the maths on today's grape prices and you'll see why low-cost, entry-level champagne is now all but extinct.

Champagne has the blessing of a delayed pricing structure since champagnes sold today are made from grapes and bottles purchased two, five or ten years ago. Knowing the inflation in costs over this time we can anticipate that the recent pattern of annual price increases of three to five and at most seven to ten percent will continue for the foreseeable future. Read the full story in the introduction to The Champagne Guide Edition VII.

At a time of record prices, volatility in the global climate, record diversity of champagne in Australia and unprecedented scarcity of the most sought-after cuvées, it has never been more vital to keep your finger on the champagne pulse, to carefully scrutinise every release and to move more decisively and more swiftly to secure allocations.

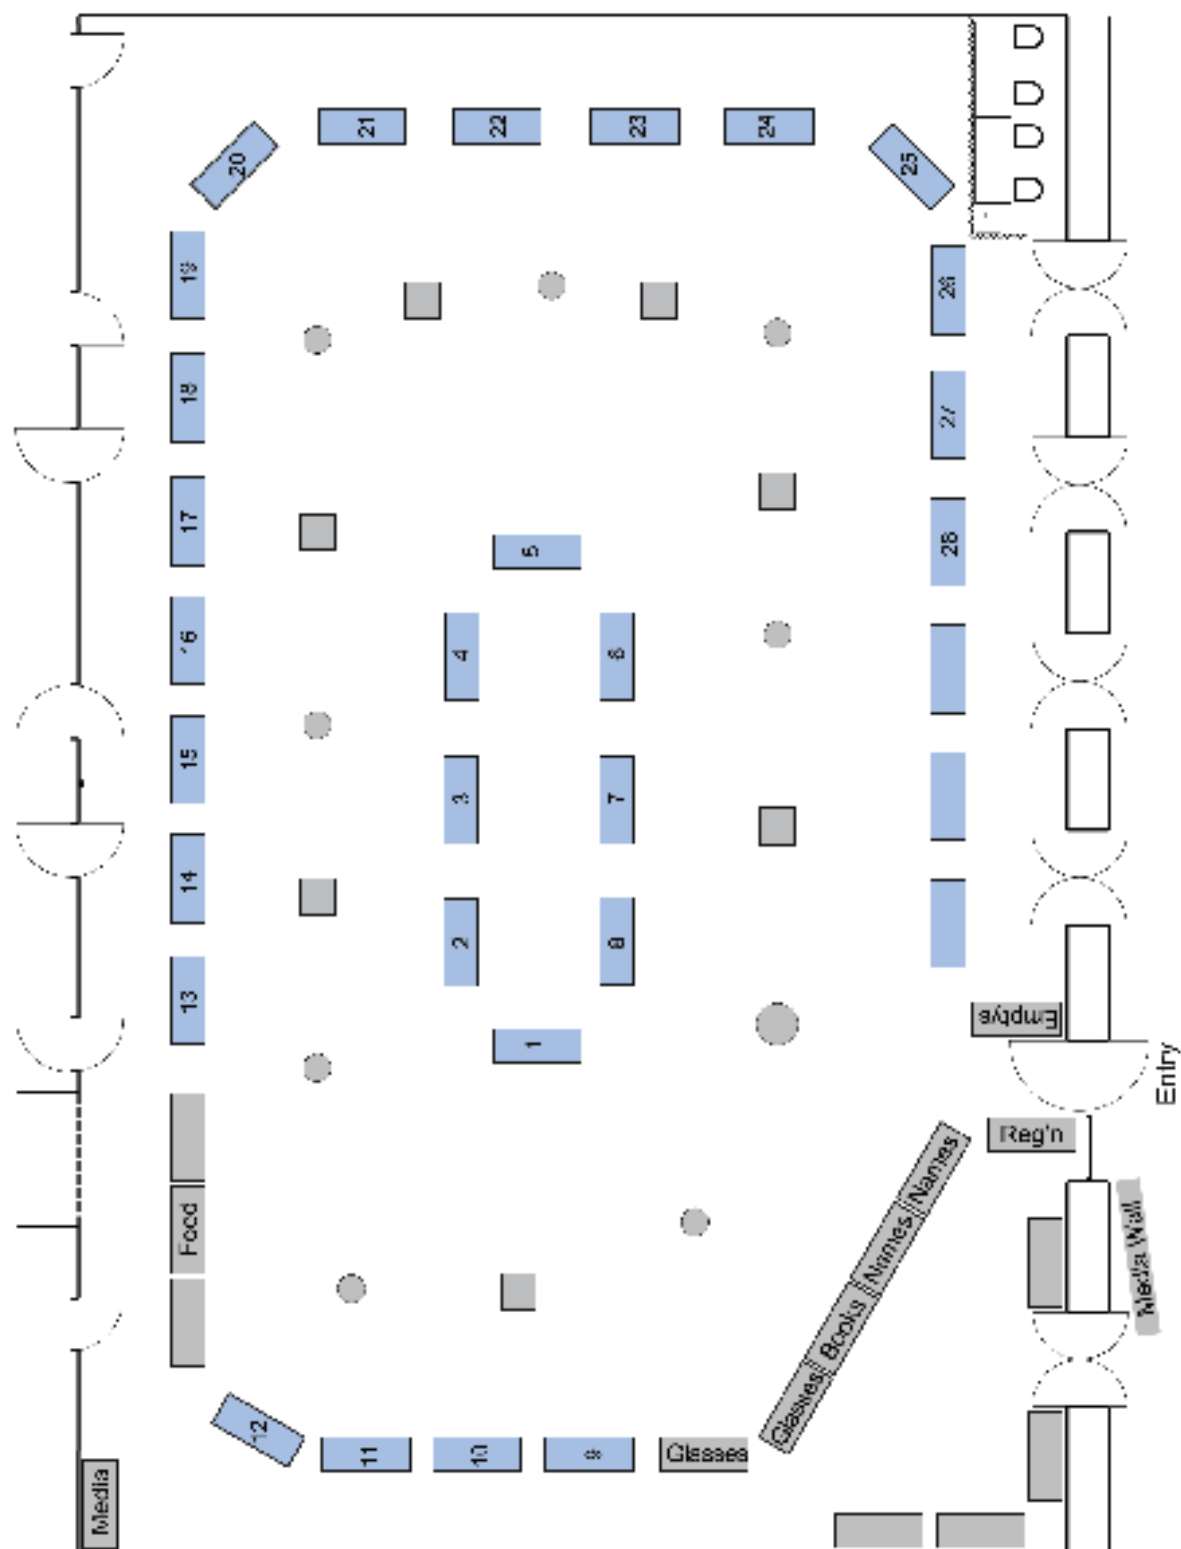

This is why Taste Champagne returns for its ninth event series in ten years, lining up almost 150 of the latest and greatest cuvées from 50 champagne houses. This is also why my new release of The Champagne Guide Edition VII is the biggest and most comprehensive yet, 50% up on the previous edition.

For many years you've been asking for more regular updates, a full catalogue of past reviews and a fully searchable interface. I have listened, and I am proud to announce www.Champagne.Guide, featuring reviews of more than 5200 champagnes (and counting), more than 250 house profiles and dozens of articles. Fourteen years in the making, the site is now the central hub for all my champagne commentary.

Champagne has never been more spectacularly diverse, and never more universally outstanding than it is this year. It's my great pleasure to welcome you to Taste Champagne, to discover this exciting new age of champagne for yourself!
