Welcome to Taste Champagne!

Welcome to the 10th series of Taste Champagne Australia! Our 12th year and 37th, 38th and 39th events land at a particularly volatile moment in the world of champagne.

Champagne is in a massive and unprecedented state of flux this decade, facing dramatic changes in climate and significant evolution in its viticulture which have prompted far-reaching implications for the way it is grown, made and matured, triggering record high prices. This has generated the perfect storm in the midst of radical changes in global markets as a result of changing drinking trends, worldwide political unrest and dramatic economic downturn.

Champagne's most significant evolution of the past decade has been its steady march toward sustainability, which has diminished yields by roughly 25 percent, while increasing vineyard labour by a similar factor. Meanwhile, the base grape price continues to spiral by around eight percent every year since 2018. Ancillary and energy costs have skyrocketed since the pandemic and the Ukraine war and continue to be driven by high inflation, with dry goods up 20%, bottles up 30%, sugar up 50% and shipping by a factor of five or six. Costs were further magnified by the dismal yields of the 2020 and 2021 harvests and small yields of 2023 and 2024. Grand cru fruit now costs €10 per kilogram and it takes up to 1.5 kilograms to make a bottle of champagne. For the full story on each of these trends, see the introduction to The Champagne Guide Edition VII.

Champagne had been holding off on passing on these soaring costs of production to the market, but its opportunity came with the record demand triggered by the pandemic between 2020 and 2022, proving to be a golden era in which global champagne sales flew in the face of all expectations and inflated dramatically in the midst of lockdowns and border closures.

When I penned my 400-page report on the global state of champagne at the height of the calamity of pandemic lockdowns in June 2020, I forecast that 'for years and perhaps decades to come, we will continue to reference champagne's performance up to and including 2019 as defining the direction for the future of champagne.'

For this reason, five years on, there's no sense comparing champagne's current market performance with its wild fluctuations since 2020, but there are key insights to be gleaned with reference to 2019.

In 2023, global wine consumption hit a record low since 1996 and international production was the lowest since 1961. Record high champagne prices coincided with high inflation and dramatic economic downturn, reducing consumers' purchasing capabilities, creating the perfect storm for champagne sales globally. This has only exacerbated into 2025, thanks to political and economic volatility in Champagne's two biggest markets of France and the USA.

Global champagne shipments of 271.4 million bottles in 2024 were down 8.8% on 2019 to their lowest volume since 2001. Ex-cellars value of €3.75 billion was down 25% on 2019.

In the face of high inflation and a weak exchange rate, Australia's champagne imports dropped to 7.3 million bottles, down 4.7% on 2019, far from the record high of 10.5 million in 2022. Nonetheless, Australia holds its position as the world's seventh largest champagne market and the largest consumption per head outside Europe. It now accounts for 2.7% of global champagne consumption by volume and 3.9% by value.

The ex-cellar value of champagne shows a very different trend to its decline in volume in Australia, and in 2024 imports were up 29.8% on 2019 to €147.3 million. This equates to an average ex-cellar value of a record €20.18 per bottle, up 36.2% from €14.82 in 2019. This represents a compounding increase of 6.38% per annum. By contrast, Australia's average annual inflation rate across the same period was just 3.38%.

In spite of these spiralling prices and diminishing volumes, Australia has recorded declines in the diversity of champagnes imported. We have long represented the smallest diversity of Champagne's top markets, and this has diminished further over recent years.

Our love affair with entry non-vintage cuvées remains passionate, at the expense of every other category, now 90.1% of imports, up a touch from 89.9% in 2019. This is way above non-vintage's global presence of 76%. Of Champagne's top 12 markets, only Belgium is higher than Australia.

Rosé represents just 4% of Australia's champagne imports, down 1.3% on 2019 and far from its global presence of 9.7% of the international market. Of Champagne's top 12 markets, only Belgium is as low as Australia in rosé consumption.

Prestige champagne dropped to 1.8% of our imports, down 10% on 2019, representing less than one-third of its global presence of 5.6%. Of Champagne's top 12 markets, only Belgium shows lower interest in prestige champagne than Australia.

Vintage champagne now represents just 1.2% of Australia's champagne imports, up 20% on 2019, though still a little behind the global average of 1.4%.

Low dosage champagne shipments saw significant growth in Australia in 2022 and 2023 and dramatic decline in 2024, with volumes halving to 130,000 bottles, representing just 1.8% of imports (8.3% up on 2019), which is just half of the global average.

High dosage champagne is now 1% of our imports, up 25% on 2019, though still only a small 87,000 bottles in all. Globally it's 3.7%.

Australia imported 310 champagne brands in 2024, up 33% from just 233 in 2019. Houses now represent 94.4% of the volume of the Australian champagne market (way above their global presence of 72.5%, even after a drop of 1.7% since 2019) with 128 houses (up 18.5%).

Champagne growers remain the most underrepresented category, comprising just 2.1% of Australia's champagne imports (still barely more than one-tenth of their global representation of 19%, in spite of an 11% rise since 2019) with 171 growers (up 52.7%).

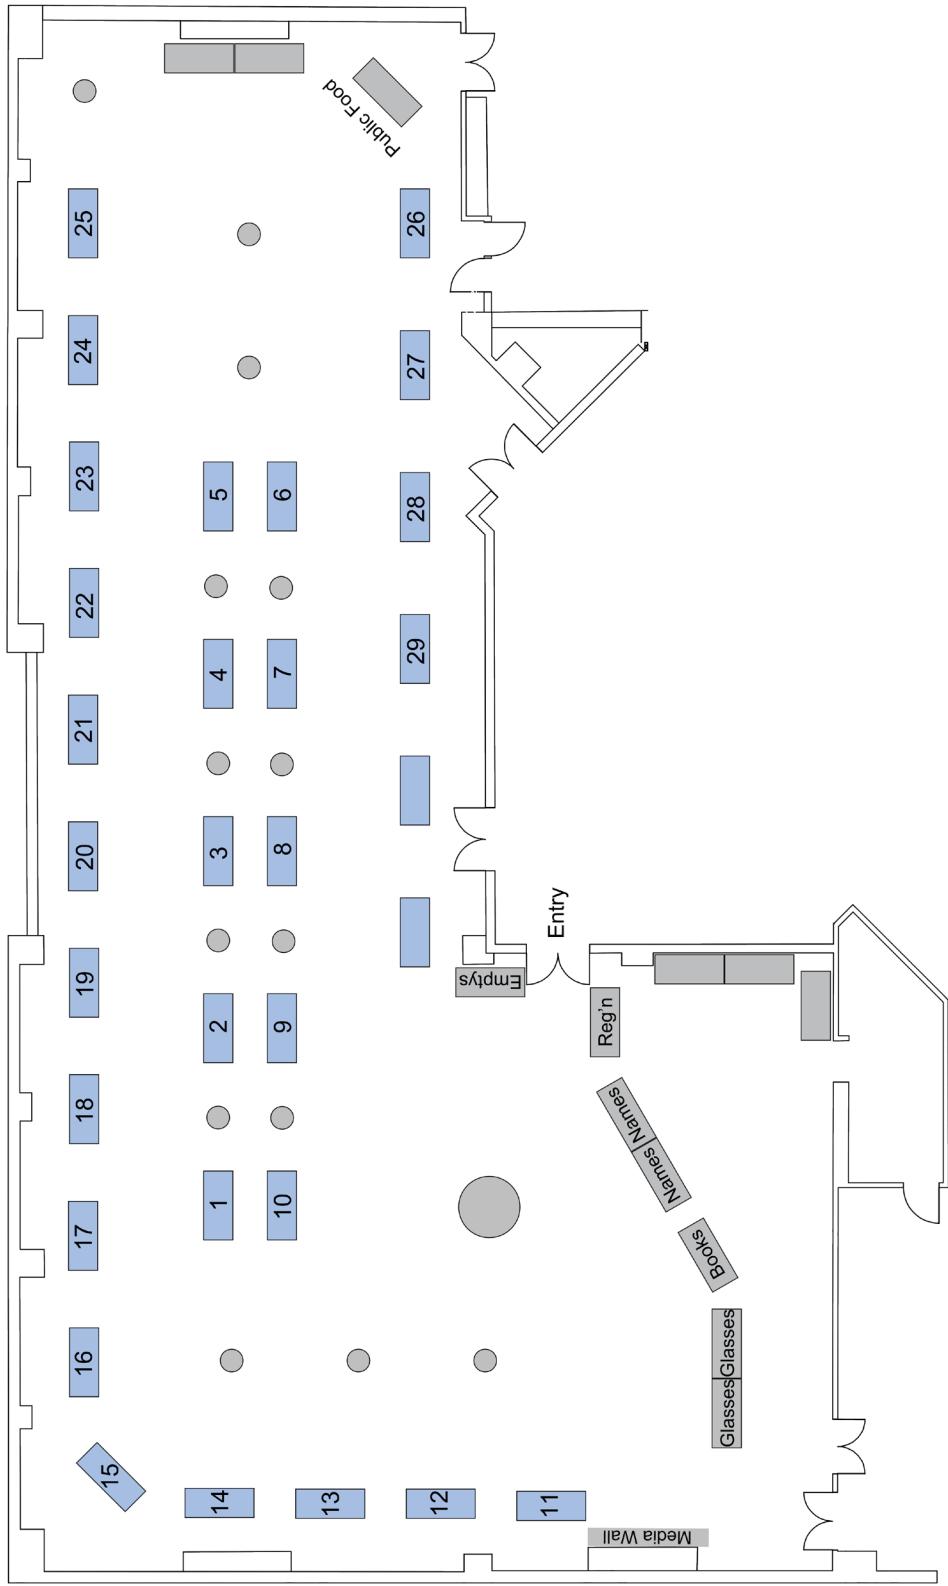

Coopératives are just 2.7% of imports (less than one-third of their global presence of 8.6% after a decline of 29% since 2019) with 11 coopératives (down 15.4%).

At this time of global adversity for champagne on so many fronts, it's never been more pertinent to present Champagne in its full diversity, for houses to showcase their latest cuvées and share their stories in the vital market of Australia. In this climate, fewer houses and importers have the resources to do so, which is why I have worked harder than ever to assemble this year's magnificent line up!

As the biggest and most anticipated champagne event on the Australian calendar for the past 12 years, Taste Champagne remains more committed than ever to showcasing the great diversity and sheer excellence that champagne's finest houses, growers and coopératives represent like no other region on the planet! I commend every one of them to you this year.

Tyson Stelzer
